In today's globalized world, learning a foreign language has become essential for personal, academic and professional growth. Shavkat Mirziyoyev, our president, is very focused on teaching English to the younger generation. One of the subjects that contributes to the profound development of a student's personality is teaching English. While self-study and technological advancements like language apps and online resources provide valuable tools, the role of teachers in this process remains indispensable. Teachers are the cornerstone of effective language acquisition, offering expertise, motivation and structure to learners.

Teachers provide a well-organized curriculum that introduces language concepts in a logical and progressive manner. They ensure students gain a comprehensive understanding of grammar, vocabulary and pronunciation breaking down complex aspects of the language into manageable lessons. Every learner has unique strengths, weaknesses and learning styles. Teachers assess individual needs and adapt their teaching methods to support each student's progress. They provide personalized feedback, helping learners overcome specific challenges, whether it is mastering tricky pronunciations or understanding complex grammar rules. Language learning can be daunting and many students face anxiety when speaking or making mistakes. Teachers play a vital role in creating a safe and supportive environment where students feel comfortable practicing. By offering encouragement and celebrating progress, they build learners confidence and motivation to persevere despite difficulties. Teachers must be able to instruct students on how to use all of this material. The educational process is a two-way process – teacher and student. There is such an English proverb – you can bring a horse to the pond, but you cannot make it drink. This is about education. The atmosphere in the classroom should be comfortable, benevolent; we should never laugh at each other's mistakes, but correct them correctly, without offending the speaker. Otherwise, the student closes and there is no talk of any further communication. The teacher in the classroom is only a partner in communication, an assistant, an employee, not a dictator. The style of communication with student is democratic. The use of the educational process. Both teaching methods and learning tactics are changing rapidly in this rapidly expanding environment. In addition to parents, teachers are extremely important in fostering a child's interest in a language or subject.

Teachers in English language teaching have a variety of responsibilities. When working with students, a teacher can play a variety of roles, including manager, evaluator, assessor, facilitator and learner. Positive relationships between teachers and students have an impact on learning. It indicates that professors who are kind and encouraging inspire students to become more engaged learners. Additionally, teachers' techniques and practices encourage pupils to participate in the learning process by making them feel included. According to recent studies, teachers must possess the sense of accountability, autonomy, authority and discipline that kids may look up to. Additionally, when teachers foster a secure and reliable environment, kids gain and become more motivated. Students are motivated to participate in the learning process by the techniques and strategies teachers employ. According to the study, students' interest and drive in school are positively impacted by their positive relationships with their teachers, which enhances learning.
